

• An ELN fortress in El Tambo, Cauca containing camps, labs, and plants to make explosives and weapons was dismantled. The DAS and the Army detonated 85 explosive cylinders. The place was surrounded by air-raid bunker systems, trenches, training camps, and underground tunnels as much as 400 meters long. Other facilities included a factory used to make uniforms and a lab with the capacity to produce a ton of cocaine every month. According to the DAS, some 300 guerrillas were housed inside the fortress.¹

• An underground arsenal found by "Cordova" Battalion troops during operation "Emperador," after a clash with the FARC's 19th Front in Rios Piedras, Aracataca Municipality (Magdalena) included 54 rifles (Galil, AK-47, R-15 and Falil), 400 60-mm & 81-mm mortar grenades, 17 shotguns, 5 carbines, 9 short-range weapons, 4,500 rifle cartridges and materiel to manufacture landmines. The weapons had been greased to protect them from rust and had been covered with black plastic. General Mario Montoya noted that finding brand new rifles in the cache indicated the FARC were short on manpower.²

• Govt of Colombia launched a new counternarcotics strategy where it will offer rewards for information that leads to the seizure of liquid and solid chemicals and narcotics. It will pay up to 400M pesos (US$160K) for each metric ton (MT) of heroin that citizens help to seize. For each MT of cocaine that citizens help to seize by providing information, 100M pesos (US$40K) will be paid out as a reward, and 50M pesos (US$20K) per MT of coca base. The rewards will be prorated by kilo. There will also be rewards for each kilo or gallon of processing chemicals that citizens help confiscate.²
